PAPER

By tracking student group successes, Paper creates transparency for equity initiatives

Currently, equity is a timely consideration for districts across the board, but it will remain critical well into the future as educators work to ensure each student is on a level playing field. Despite this, measuring academic progress—especially among groups of students who need a helping hand—can prove difficult.

That's where Paper steps in. Our powerful Insights Dashboard helps administrators gain data-driven observations on how individual learners and student groups access academic support.

How Paper's custom student groups help everyone strive for equity

Paper's custom student groups feature allows district managers and administrators to track platform usage and progress among specific segments of students. This offers many benefits and possibilities across the wider district community.

District managers

- Build equity plans for student groups needing the most assistance.

- Use data-driven insights to alter or build new plans to foster success.

Administrators

- Add students to specific groups for easier progress-tracking.

- Analyze usage insights to ensure specific student groups have access to the support they need.
